1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a continuous-emission semiconductor laser suitable for a laser beam source in a laser beam processing apparatus such as a laser beam for machining, an excimer laser beam source for an exposure apparatus used in a manufacture of a semiconductor device, and the like, or a laser beam source used for optical communication, and more particularly to a continuous-emission semiconductor laser suitable for a femto-lithography. 2. Description of the Related Art In the fabrication of a semiconductor device, a finely patterned resist or the like is used. Such a fine pattern processing is conventionally performed by a KrF or ArF excimer laser beam in a mass-production line, and is shifted to a lithography using a soft X-ray beam or an electron beam. However, such lithography is a technique being developed while aiming at mass production of a 300 mm wafer or a 4-inch wafer. Therefore, since a fabricating technology of a wafer is in a mature state, the development of an apparatus and technique to be used is desired. In addition, the improvement of a fabrication cost is one of the most important factors in the development of an apparatus and technique. At this point, in the case of a KrF excimer laser as a beam source, a gas cost, a treatment cost such as waste processing, and a maintenance cost such as a compressor are described as a main factor which influences the cost. Moreover, in the case of an ArF excimer laser as another beam source, the development of a material having a high durability is an important factor. This is because the ArF excimer laser is the first actualized laser using such a high-transmittance material. Moreover, a technique to be used is also developed as other techniques. For example, in the case of a resist, a resist having higher light absorption or the like is needed, which is selected from among the materials having a high transmittance. Accordingly, in order to put a beam source for forming a fine pattern such as an X-ray or an electron beam into practical use, a continuous-emission semiconductor laser which will be an exposure source is required to have not only a high output but also high reliability, as described above. In recent years, a VCSEL (Vertical-Cavity Surface Emitting Laser) which can be easily fabricated into a two-dimensional array structure has become

Q: Why in JDBC is possible to use variables in PreparedStatement(s) and ResultSet(s)? In addition to using bind variables in a SQL statement, you can also use a variable in place of a literal in the statement, so long as the variable is assigned to before the statement executes. Can anyone please give me a deeper reason? A: can you give me a deeper reason Are you talking about this one? In addition to using bind variables in a SQL statement, you can also use a variable in place of a literal in the statement, so long as the variable is assigned to before the statement executes. This would be more likely to be answer to the question "why we don't", than "why we do". See this for "why we do": In the SQL language, literals are a type of constant. A literal is a constant that can be used when you write a SQL statement. The SQL FORMAT() function generates a list of literals that you can use in your SQL statements. There is a library (jOOQ) that can make you use bind variable. This library will allow you to write more legible SQL code. A: "Can anyone please give me a deeper reason?" SQL is a declarative language. It does not describe what you want to do, but rather what you want to have happen. In other words, you are not saying "Show me the latest X", but "Please give me X". A: Oracle allows you to use variables in the SQL statement. This is useful when you do a bunch of different queries, and sometimes get the same values back from your resultset. How to detect mineral adhesives You may not be able to visually detect these adhesives as the names imply.
